Eye Strain Awareness

According to the American Optometric Association, in 2015, 58% of adults had experienced digital eye strain or vision problems as a direct result of spending significant time on a computer for work.

Driving and Your Vision

Everyone needs good vision in order to drive safely. Being able to see clearly allows us to properly judge distance for multiple tasks on the road, but it is not the only thing that is necessary. Peripheral vision, or vision out of the corners of your eyes, is important as well to spot cars or objects coming up beside you while you are looking forward. Early detection, through regular and complete eye exams, is the key to protecting your vision. Many vision impairments can be minimized, prevented, or slowed, so be sure to make regular appointments with your eye physician.

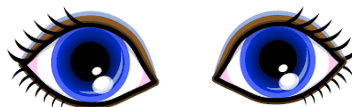

Remember that driving at night or in bad weather becomes more difficult as we get older. But don't worry...
